Prince Royce Enlists Pitbull For “Back It Up”

Jennifer Lopez finds herself on another song with Pitbull for the Spanish version of Prince Royce's "Back It Up."

(Snoop Dogg voice:) Prince Royce released "Back It Up" last week with Pitbull, but the latest version en español sees additional vocals provided from Miss Lopez. Her performance is the typical refreshing breath of Puerto Rican air we're used to from Lopez, but we just can't seem to convince ourselves why Pitbull is requested for every other three songs streaming in the Top 40. Does using the phrase "featuring Pitbull" after your song title increase your odds of a charting pop topper? It appears that way, and Prince Royce is smart for doing so... in multiple languages.

As we said before, it's a solid pop song and that's about it.

Listen to Prince Royce's Spanish version of "Back It Up" featuring Pitbull and JLo here:

Is Taylor Swift's new album leaning towards pop-rock?

Swift's name has been synonymous with Katy Perry as of late, but alas, a story about her music!

Word on the street is that she's collaborating with Bleachers frontman Jack Antonoff, Ryan Adams and Dashboard Confessional lead singer Chris Carrabba on songs for her sixth studio album.

Antonoff is an obvious choice. He and Swift collaborated on a handful of tracks on 1989, including "Out Of The Woods" and "I Wish You Would." His relationship with actress Lena Dunham even inspired "You Are In Love." Swift was asked way back when about one of the lyrics, "You're my best friend," to which she replied: "I've never had that, so I wrote

Taylor Swift has a million dollar question to answer.

She's arguably one of the most successful entertainers of our generation (and a national lightning rod for *-shaming, according to her). 1989 dominated the charts and propelled the singer into unchartered territory. There's a lot of pressure to surpass herself with her upcoming sixth studio album, so she left behind the chaos of (welcome to) New York and journeyed to Nashville, TN, where she's hiding away to nurture the sound of the next LP. According to a new report from Entertainment Tonight, it's unclear whether Tay will craft another pop album, or return to her beloved country roots; she's undecided.

A source tells ET that Swift "has been busy working on her upcoming album" and has plans to release it before the

We detailed all of the many reasons why Harry Styles' new song "Two Ghosts" is most likely about Taylor Swift in this post. It's undeniable he's singing about the 1989 singer, and BBC Radio 1 host Nick Grimshaw asked the pop star about it.

If you're interested in watching Styles squirm and avoid answering the question in any real detail, please give this video a spin:

Dua Lipa felt the wrath of the Swifties.

It's safe to say Taylor Swift is the President of the most enthusiastic fanbase on the Internet (BTS I see you though). They are the actual definition of ride or die, and Dua Lipa can attest to this.

[adinserter block="1"]

Let me explain. Last October, Dua rocked a Speak Now T-shirt at a meet & greet in Germany. The photos made the rounds on the Internet to the delight of Swifties. The pop star herself caught wind of it as well. "I AM SCREECHING WITH JOY," she said.

A mess. Lies, and a mess.

Kanye West's Twitter rant on February 24, 2016 was one of epic proportions. Not only did he mistakenly boast he has the most streamed song on Twitter this week, he promised a new album by summer (KanyeToThe claims it's titled WATCH THE THRONE 2), asked reps for the GRAMMYs to reach out to discuss how they can make it more culturally relevant, admitted his personal debt etc. etc. Because there's so many Tweets today, we thought it best to embed his entire timeline.

By the way, Kanye thinks "Waves" is the most streamed song this week, but that chart actually represents the most shared and/or mentioned songs on Twitter.

Kanye West axed the rest of the Saint Pablo Tour, including the European leg.

Selena Gomez is responding to the hate with her music.

The "Revival" singer found herself in controversy this past week when she stupidly involved herself in Taylor Swift's drama and, more importantly, made some comments on the Black Lives Matter movement.

After tweet-deleting and going dark on social media, she has shared a clip of her latest single "Kill 'Em With Kindness" reworked as a piano ballad.

The synth-pop whistle bop's lyrics take on new meaning when stripped back, and the metaphorical message can relate to many issues around the world today, regardless of whether Selena is only doing this to defend her pop squad.

Paulina Rubio confirms she has a song with Selena Gomez in the works.

It's been over five years since Rubio released 2011's Brava!, but the pop star is hard at work on a followup which is expected to debut next year. We don't know much about the sound she's aiming for, but one thing's for sure: expect a collaboration with Selena Gomez.

In a new interview with Vanidades magazine, Rubio mentioned her duet with the "Hands To Myself" singer and expects it to drop in the first quarter of 2017.

"It's truly a warrior, [in the sense that] it has a little of something from each genre, like banda, and pop, collaborations with DJ Snake and Selena Gomez," Rubio says.

Sounds like the perfect day for Lana Del Rey, who previews two new songs from her forthcoming album Honeymoon out Sep. 18 in a new four-minute album trailer, including "Freak" and "Music To Watch Boys To."

The music continues in line with her previous releases off the record. They're haunting, breathy ballads that require a certain mood to fully enjoy, but can be still be appreciated from afar.

One fan described the chorus in "Freak" like a "muddy down-tempo Florida Kilos. It's like a darker HBTB with some echoey guitar strums."

"Music To Watch Boys To" will serve as the album's second countdown single following "Terrence Loves You."

Lady Gaga's considerable talent as a songwriter is being recognised by the Songwriters Hall of Fame.

In just seven short years Lady Gaga appears to have thoroughly earned herself the title of icon thanks to her stage theatrics, controversial costumes and, most importantly, her brilliant pop songs. The Songwriters Hall of Fame haven't missed the fact that Gaga has a hand in writing the vast majority of her solo material and, according to the Associated Press, will award the "Bad Romance" star their very first Contemporary Icon Award on June 19.

Gaga's in good company, also being inducted into the hall of fame this year are Cyndi Lauper and Linda Perry amongst others and her status alongside said prolific songwriters is a welcome vote of confidence from the HoF.

Many will question Gaga's suitability for such a title given the comparative brevity of her career, but the award appears to be aimed at working, current artists more so than those with decades of experience under their belts. It's also worth remembering that 2015 marks the first time the group will award this award so we don't have any past winners with
